REFERENCES

Adabiyot va shinokhti on (Majmūai maqolot). Dushanbe, Irfon, 2009, 238 p. [Literature and his knowledge (Collection of articles)]

- 1 This collection of 27 unpublished articles by Shamsiddin Solehov, professor at the “Rūdakī” Institute of Languages and Literatures (Academy of Science of Tajikistan) in Dushanbe are organized chronologically. Most of them are devoted to 20th century Soviet Tajik literature (Section I: p. 3-150); but a second section (p. 151-238) concentrates on post-Soviet Tajik poetry and prose since the 1990s. The works of Sadriddin Aynī (1878-1954), the author commonly regarded as the founder of modern Tajik literature, are discussed, in particular his realistic prose (p. 10-16). Two other articles focus on the prose-writer Jalol Ikromī (1909-1993) and the image of the town of Bukhara in his works (p. 82-97), and on the poet Loiḡ SHERALĪ (1941-2000). Another article is about the Soviet-Tajik historian Bobojon Ghafurov (1908-1977) and his role in the development of 20th century Tajik literature (p. 63-70). The articles devoted to more general aspects of Tajik literature mostly focus on prose (in particular the short-story) rather than poetry (p. 203-212); the genre of the short story is worthy of mention during both the Soviet and post-Soviet periods.
