- 1 The young researcher reflects about the so-called southern Parthian vassal kingdoms, Persis, Elymais and Characene and their connection with the Persian Gulf and the international trade. A series of coins mint by a certain Vologases, lord, and found at Shiraz in Persis, is to connect with Great King Vologases I's policy in the second half of the 1st century AD, aimed at gaining control over the Persian Gulf sea routes though the increasing Parthian influence on the southern Parthian vassal kingdoms. Within the same context are to be seen the occupation of Characene in the last decades of the century, mentioned by Chinese sources and the foundation of a pro-Arsacid dynasty in Elymais, whose members were allowed to control the important trade hub of Susa.
